Dear Leader McConnell, Leader Schumer, Speaker Ryan, and Leader Pelosi:

Last month, 17 people, including 14 students, were killed in a mass shooting at Marjorie Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida. Sadly, this is not at all a new problem for our nation. Since 1999, approximately 150,000 students have attended primary or secondary schools with incidents of gun violence. While gun violence in schools is tragic, the underlying problem is much broader. More than 35,000 people, including nearly 3,000 children, die from gun violence each year in the United States. A recent study published in the American Journal of Medicine indicates that in high-income nations, an astounding 91 percent of children younger than 15 who were killed by bullets lived in the United States. Additionally, the presence of a gun during a domestic violence incident makes it five times more likely that a woman will be killed.

Gun violence knows no barriers. The shooting in Parkland was just the latest in a surge of mass shootings in places as diverse as a country music concert in Las Vegas, a LGBTQ nightclub in Orlando, and an African American Church in Charleston, SC. All people can be affected by this violence, but is particularly felt in low-income and racial and ethnic minority communities. African American, Hispanic, and American Indian boys are all significantly more likely than are white children to be killed by gun violence. While the numbers are staggering, there is far too little data about the causes, effects, and prevention of gun violence in the United States. In large part, this due to an effective ban on federally-funded research into gun violence. It is past time for that ban to end.

The health care community recognizes gun violence as a severe threat to the health of our nation. The over 170 undersigned organizations represent health care consumers, patients, providers, and other stakeholders. As organizations focused on improving peoples’ health and well-being, many of us have not engaged in the vigorous national debate on gun violence. We are entering that debate today because our nation is at a turning point. Fed up with excuses for why policy makers cannot do anything to stop gun violence, the American people, and the health care community are demanding action.

As health care policy experts and advocates, we know that effective policy relies on rigorous and impartial research. Despite gun violence being a leading cause of death for children, in 1996 Congress forbade any funding for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) that “may be used to advocate or promote gun control.” This provision – known as the “Dickey Amendment” – has effectively stifled meaningful federal funding for research on the causes and effects of gun violence. A recent study found that “in relation to mortality rates, gun violence research was the least-researched cause of death.”\textsuperscript{6} Even former-Representative Dickey (R-AR) who led the effort to ban this research has reversed his position because “doing nothing is no longer an acceptable solution.”\textsuperscript{7}

Across the country, students are rallying to urge policy makers to take action against gun violence. They are asking adults to enact policies to stem the rising tide of gun violence against children. There are many policies that Congress should enact to protect young people and all Americans against violence, and the health care community is united in calling for the end of one of these policies that is clearly indefensible. \textbf{We urge Congress to act swiftly to repeal the Dickey Amendment and fund research into the causes, effects, and evidence-based prevention of gun violence in our communities.}

Sincerely,
